Country peoples as a class go barefoot, thus exposing these parts to traumatism and contamination. Few if any countries have as great a percentage of the population victims of uncinariasis as has Potro Rico; and the ground-itch due to the penetration of the skin by the larvae of the worm, seldom escapes secondary infection, which frequently results in ulceration. Neglect or improper treatment, additional infection, and a lowered state of general health due to anemia, tuberculosis or other causes may readily explain the chronicity and altered appearance of a simple pyogenic ulcer. Is there a true ulcus tropicum, an ulcer peculiar to tropical countries having clinical features or a causative agent which distinguishes it from other ulcers? Workers in tropical medicine do not seem to be agreed upon this point and the term tropical ulcer, a rather tripping and euphaneous name which catches the ear and tongue, has been loosely applied to many ulcers, chiefly because they have been observed in the tropics. Others would limit this diagnosis to ulcers of a distinctive appearance or to those showing some particular organism, notably the association of spirochoetae and fusiform bacilli. Among the believers in the clinical entity of ulcus tropicum are those who regard hospital phagedoena as identical with it, an opinion disputed by others who nevertheless, admit that ulcus tropicum may...
