He enjoyed an iron constitution, and was not more remarkable for his personal intrepidity than for his moral courage. The union of these qualities obtained for him the appellation of the iron duke, by which he was affectionately known in his later years. His parliamentary oratory was plain, and to the point. Ho spoke without fluency or art, yet his strong sense and practical sagacious judgment gave him great weight with his brother-peers. His tastes were aristocratic; and his aidsde-camp and favorite generals were almost all men of family and high connections. Altogether, he was the very typo and model of an Englishman; and in the general order issued by the queen to the army he was...
