Excerpt: . . . to say whether the physical condition of counsel was such that the case should have been continued; and as he did not think the indisposition was such as to require a continuance, we will not control his discretion. 2. Under the rulings made in the case of Western and Atlantic R. CO. v. Callaway, 111 Ga. 889, Boatwright v. State, 91 Ga. 13, Bryant v. Gray, 105 Ga, 483, and Ewson v. Americas, . 106 Ga. 179, we can not hold that the judge abused his discretion in dismissing the motion for new trial, on the ground that no brief of evidence had been approved and filed, or in refusing to reinstate the same upon the ground that the stenographer did not furnish the transcript of his stenographic report of the evidence. 3. The order of dismissal, being general, without specifying the particular ground...
